

Brownfield Redevelopment

Developing brownfield lands can present some particularly challenging issues. Former industrial properties, factories, or commercial building including dry cleaning establishments or gas stations, frequently face unique redevelopment issues that, once addressed, can return the property to a vibrant, thriving enterprise.

Our lawyers have assisted in the redevelopment of more than 50 properties across the United States. These properties included former paint and steel manufacturing sites, former automobile service stations, former industrial shredding operations and former airports. Our lawyers combine extensive regulatory knowledge with “on the ground” practical experience to find creative ways for redevelopment to flourish.
